

Collin Paradis

Professor Militos

Business 342

3 December 2018

Lessons Learned

When I was younger, my mother once said to me if you have nothing nice to say don't say anything at all, and I believe that this rule applies to this course. However, since this assignment is being graded and counts for 10% of my final grade, I have no choice, but share to with you my opinion of your course. Therefore, here is my review of Managerial Communications and the material was covered.

When looking back on the class, I find that Managerial Communications was as a complete waste of my time as I hardly learned anything new in the course, and I would have been better off taking any other course that the business department offers. I found that most of the material that the course covers falls into one of two categories for me, with the first one being material that I was already taught in previous classes. The second category is material that should be common sense to anyone who is in college. Especially to juniors and seniors whom makes up most of the population of the class as the course is labeled in the three hundreds, which mostly upperclassman only take.

The course material that makes up category one is the material that you went over in class, as I found that most of the material to be a repeat from Principles of Management, which is a class that most or all of the students have already taken. Course material that falls under this category would be all of the grammar exercises that you made us do at the beginning of the year. While understanding the basics of grammar is important, everyone in college should already know how to write an error-free effective sentence.

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A

A